

A Bid for Remembrance

I draw poems from a deep, dark well, not knowing their worth before reaching sunlight. Upon appraisal, I wonder, "Is this the one?" The sheen of newness blinds me to its blemishes, the hubris of creation clouds its banality. Tossed into the bin with its predecessors, this one, too, awaits fickle remembrance.

Photo: iStock

7 March 2025

dandana.us